ABOUT OUR SHED PLANS

The first number stated in the size of our shed plans is always the width or front. The second number is the front to back depth. All of our shed plan illustrations shown on line in our family of web sites establish their orientation by reference to where the door or double doors are. For example by plan # 2322 it is stated here, "Shown to the left with double doors in the side in plan # 2322"

Many of our shed plans offer three types of foundations. Some of our plans give you the choice of all three in one plan. The easiest type to build is where the floor joists are nailed to a skid foundation, which rests on a small gravel bed. All of the shed plan numbers shown here that have a letter "S" after them can be built this way. It is also the most popular way to build sheds. The second type is built on a concrete pad. This type of construction is well suited for very large sheds where heavy loads may be placed on the floors. All of the shed plan numbers shown here that have a letter "C" after them can be built this way. The third type is better suited to sloping yards or soils that are subject to movement. It is the concrete pier style that supports an elevated wooden floor. All of the shed plan numbers that have a letter "P" after them can be built this way. A good sample of all foundations can be seen in our free shed plans available on our family of web sites. You can also get a free material list for any of our plans.
